Amanda DeVries is a freelance graphic designer with experience in all things design – from logos, websites, book covers and magazine advertisements to brochures, trade show banners and media kits. Since 2005, she has worked with organizations throughout North America and overseas to develop consistent corporate identities that can be successfully executed across various media. Based near London, Ontario, Amanda is equally at ease working with local and long-distance clients.

Amanda has a strong client base in the public sector, having worked on many assignments with federal government departments and agencies, as well as academic institutions. She has also worked with many clients in the not-for-profit and retail sectors.

Amanda brings a strong technical foundation to her creative design work, based on her background in engineering. Her formal education includes a B.A. in Applied Science from the University of Waterloo, an M.A. Sc. in Electronics Engineering from Carleton University and a Certificate in Graphic Design from Algonquin College.
